

Lazar Milojević, PhD

Research title: Research associate

Position: Department of microbiological and molecular-biological research

Affiliation: Institute of Meat Hygiene and Technology (INMES)

Occupation field: Food Safety, Microbiological and Molecular-Biological Methods in the Control of Food Safety

Short biography: Lazar Milojević is a research associate at the Institute of Meat Hygiene and Technology. He graduated from the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine, University of Belgrade, in 2016. He completed his PhD thesis at the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine in 2021. He is working at the Department of Microbiological and Molecular-Biological Research. Lazar has been involved in the control of food safety and quality as well as in scientific-professional cooperation with the meat industry. He has published several scientific papers in international and national journals, as well as at international scientific conferences. His areas of interest are food safety, emerging pathogens, antimicrobial resistance, foodborne viruses, the development and application of new microbiological methods considering food control according to European and national legislation.